Referencing

What Needs to be Referenced

- Data or information derived from other studies
- Statistical information
- Interpretation of events or evidence derived from other sources
- Direct quotations from another source
- Paraphrased text
- Facts that are not common knowledge and must be supported by evidence
- Whenever the ideas, concepts, thoughts or information are not your original work

Referencing

- To enable your reader to easily identify and find resources you have used.
- Developing an evidence-based argument
- When you use other people's thoughts, ideas & theories you need to make reference to it within your own work
- Making reference to other people's work is called CITING

What is Harvard referencing system

- University of Greenwich uses Harvard Referencing style.
- Harvard uses author-date referencing style which emphasise the name of the author and publication year
- Other citing and referencing system is called the numeric system
- Bibliographic software such as Endnotes or Biblioscape are available to catalogue reference material
- Footnotes and endnotes are not used in Harvard referencing style (Pears and Shields, 2010)

List of References versus Bibliography

- Listing these references at the end of your piece of work is done in the form of a LIST OF REFERENCES and BIBLIOGRAPHY
- List of References (sources you have cited) placed at the end of your assignment. It should match exactly the sources used in-text for in-text referencing
- Bibliography includes books, articles, web pages, etc that you used for your research but not included in-text.

(Pears and Shields, 2010)

In-Text: Attributing Ideas

- According to Guirdham (1996) the study of leadership has recently changed from consideration of trait and style to concern about strategic vision
- It appears that the trend in writing about leadership is away from the study of trait and style towards an examination of the strategic vision of successful leaders (Guirdham, 1996)

In-Text: Page Number & Quotations

- Include the author's last name, the date, and – if quoting- the page number
- e.g. Brown, 2001, p.132
- You must add the page number to the citation whenever directly quoting from the paper, but do not include the page number in the reference list

In-Text: Page Numbers & Quotations

- When quoting directly, quotation marks are used to distinguish a short quotation, usually no more than 2 lines in length
- Longer quotations should be indented and placed in a separate paragraph, you do not need quotation marks as well

In-Text: Same Author, Same Year but Different Works

- In the text this should be cited as
- (Brown, 2002 a) (Brown, 2002 b)

In-Text: Anonymous Articles

- Refer to them either by the publication title or as ‘Anon’ - be consistent.
- Put the (Year) and a page number if using a direct quote:
  - The Times (1996) suggests that…
  - It is suggested by Anon (1996) that..
  - “The new marriage between fact and fiction (…)” (The Times, 1996, p17) or (Anon, 1996:17)

In-Text: Websites

- When quoting directly from an internet page, give the exact address in the bibliography. In-text reference will look the same as any other reference:
  - Reference from WTO website accesed in 1999 would look like that:
  - The recently published ….. (WTO, 1999)
- If there is no obvious author, use the organisation's name

List of References

- Always include list at the end of your work
- List all your in-text references
- Alphabetical order by author
- Make one list
- Don't separate books, articles and websites
- Include:
  - Author's surname, Initial. (Year), Title of book/article,
  - Journal details - name, vol, issue, page or
  - book details - place of publication, publisher

Citing Dates of Publications

- The date of publication always comes after the author's name (or title if no author)
- If there is no date given use (n.d.)
- The publication date should be the actual date of the edition not the reprint date.
- To be found on the page after the title page, often described as the copyright date

Citing Dates of Publications

- Where different editions of a book exist, include in the reference list the edition details after the title unless it is a first edition which you do not need to state
- You should always take the date of the latest edition mentioned on the imprints page, which gives the publishing details
- Anything other than a 1st edition e.g. 2nd, 3rd, 4th etc., needs to be included within the reference, and goes immediately after the title

Common Errors

- Check that all the authors/text referred to in the text are in the list of references and vice versa
- Reference the sources of statistics, including data in tables and figures
- Paragraph discussing ideas needs to be referenced as well.
